

The City of Austin recognizes music talents across all genres.

This Thursday, August 22, 2013 will be proclaimed Emily Bell Day in Austin, Texas by Austin Mayor Lee Leffingwell. Emily will be performing a song in the council chambers at City Hall at approximately 5:30 p.m. followed by an official Proclamation in her honor.

Come on down to City Hall at 5:30 p.m. Thursday and join us to celebrate this wonderful achievement....

OR tune into Austin's Cable Channel 6 to see the City Council meeting air live on TV!

Emily recently performed live on the Ron & Fez on Sirius XM, The Artie Lang Show, BreakThru Radio and much more. Here is just a glimpse of what the press are saying about Emily Bell and her debut album In Technicolor.

"It should stand tall as one of the year's strongest releases." - The Houston Chronicle

"Love the retro-girl bop rockabilly trip of this Austin-based, ginger-haired flamethrower. She's got plenty of sass, snarl, and sex appeal. And her roots-rockin' band rips it up all the while she shakes and struts her stuff. This will keep any party swingin' all night long." - The Huffington Post

"In Technicolor is a titanic and triumphant effort that points towards the promise of something truly extraordinary." - Absolute Punk

"Her tunes are a little rockier, and have a little more girl-group panache than your average acoustic clutching singer-songwriter. A quick listen to "Back to the Way I Was," the down-and-dirty first single from her upcoming debut full-length In Technicolor, will disavow you of any of those kind of notions. Or better yet, watch the video. Emily Bell's got plenty of rock 'n' roll swagger." - Austinist

"Bell's voice has a brassiness and bluesy ferocity that can eat you up and spit you out. She rivals the stylings of everyone from a jazzed-up vintage Tina Turner to growling it girl Grace Potter." - Houston Press

"In Technicolor is ultimately a promising debut album that reveals an artist at her best: fearless and with a timeless sound of her own." - Tribeza

For more information, check out:

www.emilybell.com

For media inquiries, please contact: heather@juiceconsulting.com